

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Secure communications can be achieved between a server computer and a client computer using a key management apparatus. The key management apparatus maintains a private key for decrypting information from a server or client computer. Data encrypted with a public key is transferred to the key management apparatus for decryption.